World Name: Alterra

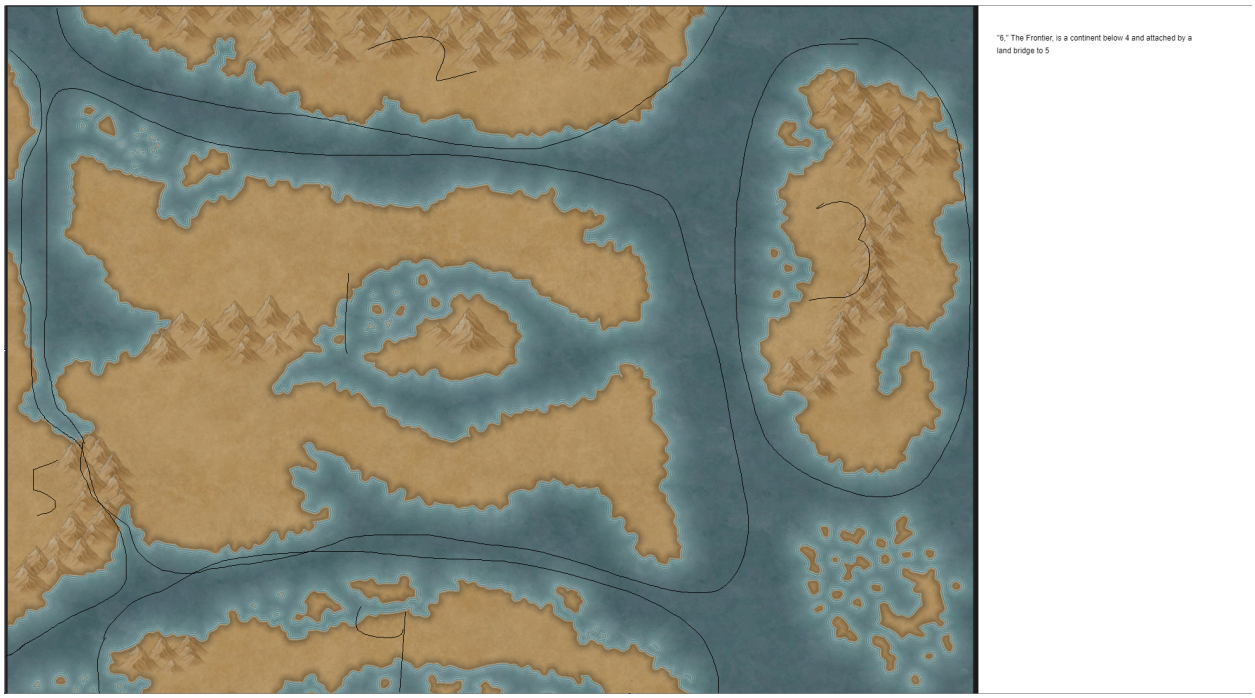

Nations/Territories

1. Sarka (The Sarkonian Empire is a warmongering state in an almost perpetual state of war with someone, typically the neighboring state of Sargasi)
2. Sargasi (Capital Tel Ketha is “The Oasis of Knowledge,” heavy emphasis on magic and technology. Democracy consisting of representatives from various tribes from the desert.)
3. Centoria (AKA Centorian Union of Independent Kingdoms. Consists of Feitoria, Vitford, Castello, Doggarde, Whithold. The main Island and Castle are named Ostil. “The Mountaintop,” Polynex’s Holy Land, sits within their territory, it is the place with the most powerful connection to Celestia, City of the Divine, guarded heavily by the Black Legion. Massive egoists, currently in a civil war with the Four Horsemen.)
4. House Winter (Japanese Influcence)
5. House Sun (Chinese Influence)
6. House Rain (Japanese/Chinese Influence)
7. House Sparrow (Japanese Influence, all samurai are female cuz different ig)

8. The Immortal Shogunate (The Union of the 4 Houses, a Shogun rules for life, each Shogun must pick a successor from a different House to maintain the balance of power)
9. The Silver Isles (This tropical archipelago, with its white sand beaches, swaying palm trees, and lush jungles would be the perfect place to spend a relaxing holiday. If it weren't for the vagabonds, thieves, pirates, and general scum that'd as soon kill you as shake your hand. This region is known for its eye-for-an-eye frontier justice and an economy driven almost solely by piracy and other illicit business. Free from the watchful eyes of Cattaleya's Navy, the isles are home to many black markets and many trinkets, odds, and ends can be found in the many trading ports scattered amongst the archipelago. Some of these 'treasures' could fetch you good prices in the stalls of more legitimate parties, but others could tip the scales of world power forever. Good luck finding those amongst the trash and scum that the isles are known for. A notoriously dangerous place, here a man's life is worth as much as the wrong word, the wrong clothes, and the wrong look. However, one not need look far to see the good folk struggling to get by amidst the lawlessness. The Silver Isles are home to many Refugees, ex-Slaves, and those running from their pasts, all of whom are simply looking for a new start. There are plenty of opportunities for our visiting heroes to do tremendous good for these people, and conversely, plenty of opportunities to indulge in tremendous evil.
10. Crescent Isle (The largest island in The Silver Isles, and widely considered to be the "capital." It exists as a massive black market trading hub and a hive of illicit activities. It is also the home of the infamous pirate trinity, the South Wind, the Crimson Heart Corsairs, and the Siren's Song, a vicious group of pirate gangs warlords that's the closest thing to government here. They are headed by the enigmatic and universally feared Salazar Al-Shareen, the pirate king. The large bay in the center is Riptide Bay)
11. Cattaleya (Trading Nation, contested by the Wolfpack and the Resistance)
12. Wolfpack Territory (Consists of the Conquered Nations of Greymark, Andrion, Mortley, Florentine, Whitehelm, Emerivalia, Dale, and parts of Merethin)
13. Qaldür (Most recent territory, a monster nation that gained independence through dominance over Merethin and through the defeat of the Plague Doctor)
14. Contested Territory (Formerly Merethin)
15. Cultist-Controlled Dormuth (The independent state born from a civil war with Dormuth, who won through the aid of the Cultists and Risen. Afterwards, Cultists staged a coup and now rule the new nation under isolationist terms. The Gate of Nezeril is the capital. The gate has made the surrounding area unstable and corrupted the citizens. There is a magic barrier which so far impenetrable.

16. Contested Territory (Formerly Dormuth)
17. Astoria (Loose union of City-States/Castles , much like ancient Greece, controlled by a council of Lords, often infighting, Shaubeny is a legendary Lord and the most powerful, stays out of the infighting, but steps in from time to time)
18. The Golden Imperium (A hyper religious empire of human supremacists in a perpetual state of war. They believe their Golden Emperor is the single most powerful sorcerer in history, and the imperium believes him to be a god.)
19. Velengard Winters cold enough to freeze blood. Unearthly beasts that roam unchecked. Strange, ancient traces of a long dead culture. And men harder than iron and colder than ice. Beset against the unforgiving elements of the great Nordic Wastes, the Northmen of Velengard are renowned across Alterra for their ferocity and skill in battle. A loosely knit society that mainly subsists upon seasonal raiding, Velengard is ruled by no king. Instead, what little habitable land exists is constantly fought over in disputes between the 37 clans that dominate the southern tip of the continent. These bloody, never ending battles only ever cease during the annual fall raiding season, during which all clans big and small ignore their differences for a time, man their longships, and viciously attack Astoria's northern coast in distinct loosely organized hordes, taking loot, crops, and women back to their villages in the freezing north, where even the great Astorian Lords dare not follow. Every year the realm's best knights await the raids, and every year they are bested. Were it not for the constant infighting and bickering amongst the clan Jarls, I wouldn't be surprised if the Northmen of Velengard would easily take the entirety of Astinor. All that separates the Northmen of Velengard from greatness is a leader strong enough to unite the clans and lead them to victory. The icy wastes north of Velengard also hold a terrible secret. Once, in a time lost to the millennia, a great culture of people thrived in the icy tundra. They have long since faded into obscurity, but some say the wonders of their civilization survive until the present, trapped under the ice, waiting to be freed. Velengard is home to countless villages that dot the landscape, but only three cities: Jordheim, Kurak, and Brunnhagen. Each is the ancestral home of the three greatest clans in the North: The wolf clan, raven clan, and bear clan. Technically the largest of the clans, the Jarls of these three are responsible for choosing exactly when and where the clans raid. Other than that they have almost no power over the other clans. [Black Sands beaches, frozen tundras, frozen lakes, northern lights, snowy forests, fishing villages, Mountains]
20. Izinor (Consists of entirely monster territory, too difficult to explore)
21. Eranor, more commonly called The Frontier (Mostly unexplored) {Characters who know a lot more about Alterra and or have been there, such as the Black Legion, Virion, and or the Gods will refer to this continent as Eranor}

22. Skōta (Independant stronghold city-state that is completely surrounded by walls and defenses on both sides of the wall, no one gets out nor gets in. The people of Skota have adopted a disdainfully apathetic view towards the Northmen of Velengard, a view the Northmen are more than happy to reciprocate. It's made up of people who adapted ice powers and fire powers to make steam, as in they can only make steam. They use their steam powers to power their city, and as a result the city has become a steampunk industrial powerhouse. The surrounding vicinity of the city is unfrozen, dry, and difficult to breathe in due to the steam sucking up all the air and moisture and also being extremely hot.)
23. Vladistov (Russia but if it kept its nose out of everyone else's business.)

Continents

1. Astinor
2. Velengard
3. Nakimata
4. Sarshiya
5. Izinor
6. Eranor (Referred to most characters as The Frontier)

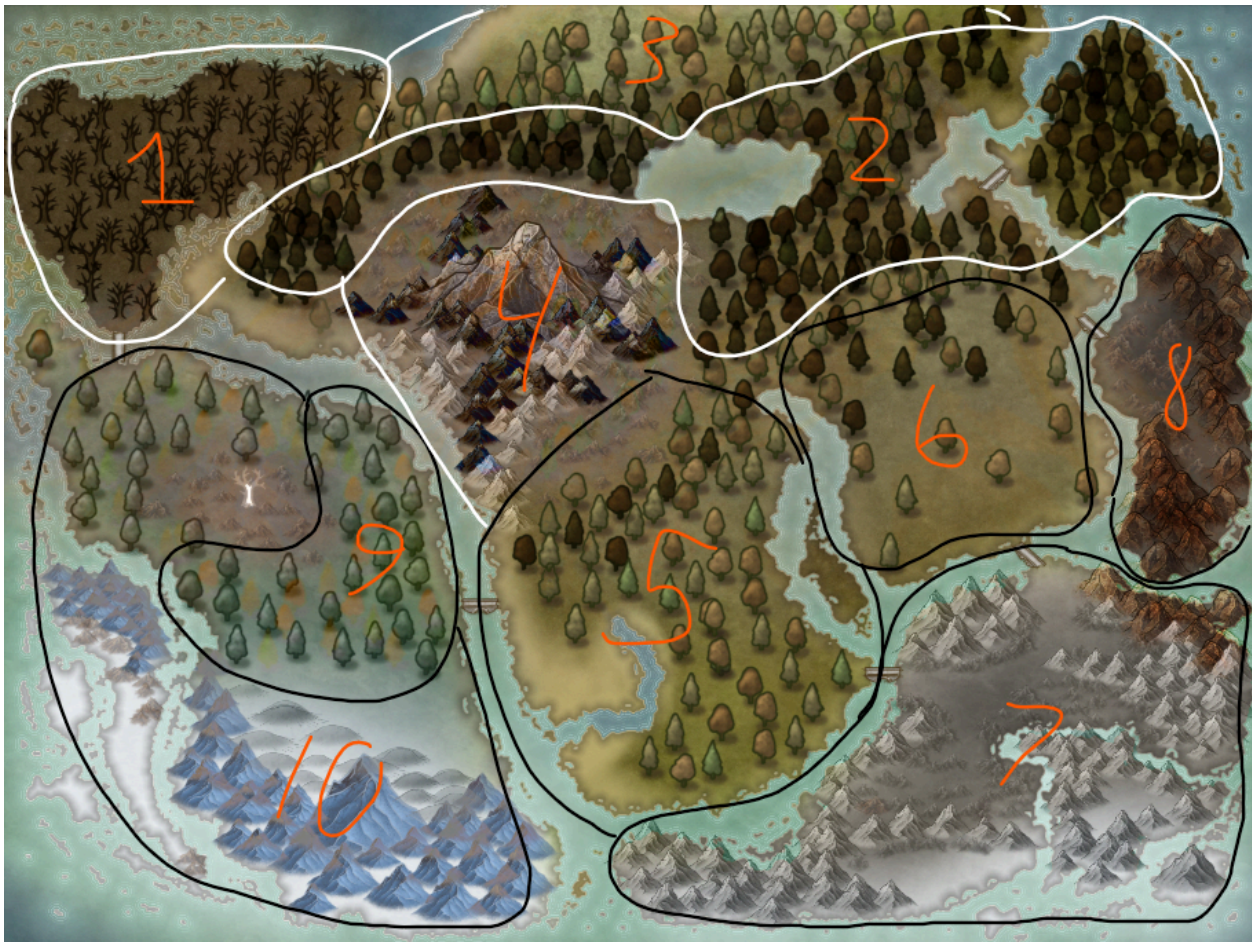

Nations/Territories (Borders currently undefined)

The grey areas are basically mordor with red crystals, and anything darker than the middle grey is basically Mustafar with lava spewing everywhere, and also the red crystals.

1. Frozen Wastes (Almost all mountains, only the northern half of Velengard is colder than here. The water has frozen into a path connecting to the other side of Izinor, but they don't call it Serpent's Pass for nothing...)
2. Kharak-thel (This orc kingdom thrives on raiding its Eastern neighbors for supplies, as they don't have much to live off of in this red sands mesa. On its Western border lies The Red Pass of Imriel {called so because of a great battle beforehand, causing so much bloodshed that the soil turned red permanently. At night, the souls of the fallen haunt the pass}. We may lean more on LOTR orcs than WoW orcs, but I don't really care)
3. Nezeroth (Largest, and most powerful, kingdom in Izinor. This is a kingdom of man, and they delve into the red crystals and dark magic that most know from the Cultist-controlled Dormuth. The rest of Izinor is subservient to Nezeroth following its reawakening. In addition to mankind, there is also the Risen, which are basically demons)

4. Ilrion (Technically also part of Nezeroth, this part includes more cold areas. It is under the control of the Necromancer, but he serves as a second in command for Nezeroth)
5. The Badlands
6. The Looming Marshes (The one real connection between Eranor and Izinor. Unfortunately, you have more luck crossing the Serpent's Pass than crossing the Marshes. With Spectral Knights of Evos, corrupted treants (and maybe corrupted bo-trina), the deadliest spider queen (the sword spiders), the ghosts of the dead pulling you down either physically or with enchantments, and a curse laid upon the marshes that makes you lose your way, only the strongest could ever hope to cross)
7. Forsaken Kingdom of Evos (Basically Castle Blackburn, this kingdom of once noble knights turned into a corrupt dominion filled with servants of corruption, barred from death. Is sort of a combination of Eranor and Izinor, with corruption and ghostly things, but it's all derived from mana n stuff.)
8. Eranor

Nations/Territories (Borders are blurry but not an issue for them due to separations on islands)

Nilvenora is very similar to Izinor. Aesindel is just standard stone and rock. Crystal mountain sports purple crystals. Treants, Golems, Wyverns, and dragons are present in almost all of Eranor, except for the Marshes.

1. The Looming Marshes (Detailed above in the Izinor map)
2. Dimwood (An enchanted forest of the unpleasant kind. Wood Elf tribes inhabit these woods, and are generally hostile to those encroaching on their lands. Also sports the likes of wargs, Bo-trina, and other fantasy shit. Kingdoms of Irindel and Aellion extend into this area, but their outposts become more sparse further north.)
3. The Frontier (This area is the only explored section of Eranor, as almost all who travel into Dimwood don't return, where either they were killed by something, or they found something else that made them stay. This area is populated by mainly man, a few elves, and sparse creatures such as golems. There's a few taverns and villages, but only one big city here.)
4. The Crystal Mountain (Though the map exaggerates its size, as Irindel extends a good way up there, the Crystal Mountain is a massive monument that stands as the highest peak in Alterra, surpassing Centoria's Mountaintop and Nezeroth's Volcano. In the mountains south of the Crystal Mountain is the largest of the 3 Dwarven Kingdoms, though all 3 of them maintain a low profile. The Crystal Mountain itself is riddled with jagged protrusions of amethyst colored crystals, sought out for their capabilities to conduct mana and both intake and expel mana and energy. These crystals grow at an abnormally fast rate (still slow tho). The mountain is rumored to house the first of the Crystal Dragons, the largest and most powerful of the dragon variants.)
5. Irindel (The largest of the Elven Kingdoms, Irindel serves as the "leader" of Eranor, trying to assert its ways on the rest of Eranor. Most diplomatic and kind of the Eranorian Kingdoms. Their queen is known for sage wisdom and reasoning, and is likely descended from the God of Wisdom. The Elves of Irindel are tree elves and are attuned to nature, but not to the degree of the Wood Elves. They use a mix of magic and weaponry. The magic they use is very mana based, harnessing mana blasts and mana healing, etc.)
6. Aellion (Second largest kingdom, more militaristic than its counterpart. The Daybreak elves attempt to perfect the art of combat, but still use magic, though it's only useful during the day. Though they, like Irindel, have a Queen, her power is overshadowed by the figurehead of the military (essentially the dynamic between the old japanese emperor and the Shogun). Aellion attempts to be the strongest of the kingdoms in order to be free of Irindel's meddling)
7. Aesindel (The one Kingdom of Man, the Aesindeli are the most technologically advanced in all of Eranor. Their level of science and technology is rivaled only by Skota, though they both took differing paths on their technology. While Skota and the Golden Imperium developed a steampunk science, Aesindel mastered plasma and hardlight, creating hardlight rifles as well as retractable and morphable energy blades. The Aesindeli are obsessed with beauty and aesthetic, and often will prioritize looks over viability (though viability is almost always perfected as well). This obsession is best seen in Wraith with his laser cape. Their leader, while seeming like a dictator from the outside, is actually very popular and is truly a good man who looks out for his people. In the Southeast lies the Abandoned Peak, named for the mountain being connected to no other network of mountains, which houses another of the 3 dwarven kingdoms.)

8. Nilvenora (The Dark Elves are evil for the sake of being Evil. They are ruled by a Dark Lord who is basically Sauron. They manipulate shadows, create golems from dark magic, and corrupt mana, which lead to the mana-stealing sorcerors which becomes a big fucking problem. In their southern mountain lies the 3rd dwarf kingdom)
9. Ivoroth (The twilight elves are very similar to Aellion, except that their magic is derived from the moon. Their lands are the most… odd section of Eranor, with an enchanted forest with much more magic at play. Floating rocks, more vibrant crystals, bluer grass and trees, pixies (but the legend of zelda kind), Golems of all kind, lil baby dragons, and whatever else you can think of. The Twilight Elves maintain a violently neutral stance, offering diplomacy and allowing themselves to be convinced on certain issues, but other times won't budge at all. They also have a queen, and her stance of caution and suspicion of intruders is reflected by the kingdom as a whole.)
10. Neutral Territory (These are grounds no kingdom would dare to claim. In the heart of the enchanted forest is the First Tree, the source of all mana in Alterra. It is rumored to be the first life created on Alterra. Its roots travel all across the island, and has regenerative properties. Further down in the mountains is where Lithos remains. Below the First Tree is the original rift used by the Gods to make Alterra. Ivoroth is the self declared protectors of the First Tree, hence Lumina’s knowledge of it and Lithos, as she’s an exile from Ivoroth)